

National Cancer Diagnosis Audit

This GP practice is taking part in an important national project looking at how people are diagnosed with cancer. This project is called the National Cancer Diagnosis Audit (NCDA).

If you have been diagnosed with cancer, your GP practice may share information about things that led up to your diagnosis (for example, how many times you came in to see the GP with symptoms, what types of tests you had, and when you were referred) with NHS Analysts from Information Services Division (ISD), part of NHS National Services Scotland. The type of information, and how it is shared, is controlled by law and enforced by strict rules of confidentiality and security.

Taking part in the NCDA shows that this GP practice is committed to diagnosing cancer as early as possible, and to improve care for people with signs and symptoms that could be cancer, as well as cancer patients.

For further information about the NCDA , please see www.cruk.org/ncda.

Important
Patient
Information

Our Privacy Notice has more detail on how your data will be used and who to contact if you are concerned about how your data is being used, please see www.cruk.org/ncdascotland

The NCDA is delivered in partnership with:

