

Brush up on the NHS dental treatment you're entitled to.

The dental reform has been introduced by the Scottish Government in a continued effort to support the oral health needs of every patient in Scotland. Patients are still entitled to a comprehensive range of treatments through the NHS.

Patients will notice the following changes to dental treatment and care:

- General Dental Service check-ups will change from every six months to every 12 months. However, dentists can tailor recalls based on patients' individual oral health needs.
- The maximum amount that will be charged to an individual per treatment plan will remain capped at £384 or 80% of costs.
- Some patients may be eligible to receive help towards healthcare costs. And some still qualify for free dental care.
